

Everyday Irritancies

Kristine M. Unat

1.) Dressing up and 2.) doing hair and make-up are my first and second irritants; it took me a while to appreciate why females and some people are so obsessed with "looking great" or being presentable because it makes a huge difference or influence on them. In addition, the term "Aesthetic" is now used to refer to an individual's whole appearance, which differs from its original definition. To be more specific, I try to be one because I feel like I've fallen behind the times after staying at home for a while, and these guys look and feel great. But getting there is difficult, and because it is difficult to mix and match outfits and because applying hair and cosmetics takes a long time. It's especially challenging for someone who sleeps late and wakes up late. Another problem was that those items were not at all comfortable; I felt good because I believed I looked nice, but you can't have both. And the thought of "Are you doing it properly like everyone else?" is a tremendous challenge, knowing that it takes ability to get it perfectly.

3.) I have had bad vision ever since, and I despise wearing glasses. They are prone to fogging, dust, and water droplets, which is quite irritating. And most of my observations regarding my regular routine outside are unconcerned with our situation. I have seen a lot of times in class that the text and structure of the PPT were too small and difficult to read, and I have also noticed it on transit, public places, and so on. In fact, my earlier experiences in lower grades continue to influence me to this day, such as why I am so awful at typing things correctly since I learn by listening without seeing what has been said. And picture all the situations that need vision, which is my everyday annoyance.

4.) Wearing a mask and 5.) Internet connection are my daily annoyances, but there is little I can do about it.
